Washington, DC

Drawing on robust defense and plaintiff-side experience, Adam helps guide entities of all sizes through lengthy eDiscovery processes, with a particular focus on complex litigation and government investigations. When a client needs a more practice- or industry-specific perspective, Adam can draw on his background in antitrust litigation as well as a decade working in the music and entertainment industries.

During law school, Adam provided pro bono legal services to local Washington, DC, artists and organizations as a student attorney in the Glushko-Samuelsan Intellectual Property Law Clinic and served as a note & comment editor for the American University Business Law Review.
