Hatch-Waxman Litigation

Life Sciences IP Litigation

Brianna focuses her practice on life sciences patent litigation, including Hatch-Waxman litigation and biologics litigation under the Biologics Price Competition and Innovation Act (BPCIA). Brianna has handled numerous aspects of complex patent litigation from due diligence through trial, including pre-suit due diligence, fact and expert discovery, taking and defending depositions, claim construction, briefing and arguing dispositive motions, and direct examination of witnesses at trial. She also has experience drafting appellate briefing submitted to the US Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit.

Brianna has frequently presented on compliance with the patent marking statute (35 US Code § 287), as well as virtual marking practices. As part of this work, she has developed various best practices and tools, including standard operating procedures, for organizations ranging from startups to large pharmaceutical companies.

Prior to law school and while pursuing her bachelor's degree, Brianna worked in the Matzger Group at the University of Michigan, where she focused her research on crystal polymorphism of pharmaceutical and nutraceutical materials.
