Neeshae handles a variety of complex commercial and securities litigation matters in federal and state court. She leverages her experience in government and the private sector to support the dynamic needs of established and emerging tech companies. She also maintains a robust pro bono practice.

While at University of Michigan Law School, Neeshae was selected for and argued in the Global Antitrust Institute Invitational Moot Court. She also served as an associate editor of the Michigan Journal of Law Reform. In addition, she represented juvenile defendants in state court through the school's Juvenile Justice Clinic and served as president of Wolverine Street Law, an organization that teaches incarcerated individuals about their legal rights.
