

New York to Require Employers to Inform Workers of Electronic Monitoring

November 12, 2021

On November 9, 2021, New York Gov. Kathy Hochul signed into law a bill that will require employers in New York State who engage in any electronic monitoring of employees' telephone, email and internet access and usage to provide notice to employees about such monitoring. The law takes effect on May 7, 2022.

Affected employers

The law applies to any employer with a place of business in New York State that monitors employees' telephone, email and internet access and usage. There is no employer size threshold.

Notice requirements

The written notice must inform employees that all telephone or email transmissions or conversations, or any internet access or usage via any electronic device or system, may be subject to monitoring at all times and by any lawful means. Employers must provide written notice upon hire to new employees that is acknowledged by the employee. In addition, employers must conspicuously post the notice.

Exceptions and limitations

The law does not define what constitutes "electronic monitoring." For example, it is not clear whether an employer needs to give notice if it reviews employee emails after employment termination, requires sales employees to log phone calls or reviews system logs after prohibited content is flagged.

Instead, the law enumerates three acceptable practices that alone would not trigger the notice requirement. Specifically, electronic monitoring does not require notice when:

- It is designed to manage the nature or volume of incoming or outgoing electronic mail or telephone voicemail or internet usage.
- It is not targeted to monitor or intercept the activities of any individual employee.
- It is performed solely for the purpose of computer system maintenance and/or protection.

Notably, the law does not prevent employers from monitoring employees' telephone, email, and internet access and usage. Rather, employers retain the right to monitor all such activity, as long as employees are given proper notice.

Violations

Employers who violate the law will be subject to fines of up to $500 for the first offense, $1,000 for the second offense, and $3,000 for the third and each subsequent offense. Only the New York attorney general has authority to enforce this new law, and there is no private right of action.

Action items for employers

Once the law takes effect, New York employers who monitor employees' electronic telephone, email, and internet access and usage should prepare to disseminate notices to new hires and conspicuously post the notice. Given the many valid uses of employer IT system and communication monitoring, we anticipate that most employers will issue the required notices notwithstanding if they currently monitor IT systems or communications.
