Christine represents clients in high-stakes government enforcement matters before the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB), Federal Trade Commission (FTC) and the US Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD). She also has represented clients in a variety of complex commercial litigation matters throughout all phases of litigation – including at trial. Christine's pro bono practice has focused on helping active-duty service members and veterans. Before becoming an attorney, Christine spent five years in the US Army as an officer in the 95th Civil Affairs Brigade (Airborne), where she supported commanders and units conducting unconventional warfare and direct-action missions across the globe.
